The Zimmerman House is the only Frank Lloyd Wright-designed residence open to the public in New England. Wright designed the home for Dr. Isadore J. and Mrs. Lucille Zimmerman in 1950; four decades later they donated it to the Currier Gallery of Art. Made of Georgia cypress, molded cement and matte red brick, the house is topped with a clay tile roof, recently restored to Wright's original specifications. Describing it as a classic "Usonian," Wright also chose textiles for the house and designed modular freestanding and built-in furniture, gardens, and even the mailbox. A ten-year plan to restore the site's landscape is well underway.
